

Immediately upon the arrival of the train, they stepped on board, and entering the saloon of the Prince of Wales, Mr. Thompson presented the joint card of himself and Sir Sargent, and also a letter of introduction from Governor Lord Lytton. The latter received the card and the letter with great interest, and after a few minutes' conversation, approached Col. Thompson and in a courteous and amiable manner extended his hand, at the same time giving a slight nod to the Duke of Newcastle, as if to signify that he was approving of the introduction. Col. Thompson discharged his duty in an easy and gentlemanly manner, and a lively conversation at once sprang up.

parations to spread a collation when the train entered the depot at Springfield, and soon after the cars were under way again the Prince and suite and his pets sat down to a lunch of cold ham and tongue, and oodcock. The Prince designated the places for the guests, seating the Marquis de Lonsada opposite to himself, Col. Lawrence on his right, and the gentlemen of landed new car was added to the royal train at Worcester, and continued the Board of Directors of the Boston and Worcester Railroad. The car was fitted with costly velvet upholstery and carpets, and was decorated with flags and bunting. Upon the roof, consisting of two beautiful rugs, one bearing a crest of the American eagle, and the other the British lion. The train was in charge of Conductor Waller of New York steamboat line, and Mr. Twitchell, the ticket agent. Mr. Superintendent Phillips had the same car in charge of the collection of the Prince and Princess from Washington to Longwood.

At Longwood the city authorities received the Prince, who Lincoln entered the saloon car, and being unrecognized by the Prince, his Royal Highness was quickly toward, and extending his hand to the Prince, greeted him with the warmth of an old friend. The two had previously met in Halifax. The Prince left the car on the arm of Mayor Lincoln, and after the presentation of Mr. Everett, Mr. Winthrop, and others, he walked down the platform and took a walk up the hill, which he had brought a lady and rapidly over the road, and expressed his admiration of its appearance.

The Prince and suite, the Committee of the City Government and others then ascended the steps and took refreshment in waiting for them. The procession then returned to the Hotel, where the Prince and Princess ascended at once to their apartments. The crowd was very great, and the decorations along the line of march were exceedingly tasteful.

House have been divided off from the remainder the hotel by a partition, and will be devoted entirely to the use of the Prince of Wales and his suite. The apartments were opened yesterday morning for the first time, and were found to be in the hands of the committee. The ladies' parlour on the right of the hall, has been supplied with new silk and damask-covered furniture, in green, gold, and wood colors, and with new and gorgeous drapery. A Chickering grand piano has also been placed in the room, and the walls have been hung with several beautiful landscape pictures. The apartment with a fireplace and a large round mirror on the left side of the hall, and entered from the reception room by an entry, is the dining room, formerly the ladies' parlor. This apartment, too, has been most sumptuously furnished. The tables laden with the most elegant dining set ever seen in a Boston dining-room. The walls of room are also ornamented with paintings specially provided for this occasion only; among them a bull's head by Hinckley. In the rear of this room is a series of parlors, which will be used by the guests for various purposes. Over these rooms are the private parlor and sleeping room to be occupied by the exhibitor, and sleeping rooms for his retinue. The private parlor is directly over the dining room. It is filled with entirely new furniture, including a piano, and the walls are ornamented with several paintings. The sleeping-room, which is located in the rear of the

Bridal Chamber, and it has been furnished most which attract special attention; one of the Queen, the second a colored photograph of the Prince of Wales. Dressing-rooms are connected with both the bed and chamber. Upon the opposite side of the bed and also in the rear of the royal chamber, are ing apartments—some of which have been newly place—for the members of the Prince's suite. The rooms have been fitted up under the direction of Stevens and Mr. Brigham, upon whose taste and they confer unlimited credit.

His movements of the Prince to-day will be as follows:

During the morning he will be left free to himself, will remain at his rooms or amuse himself by looking about the city, as may best suit his convenience and pleasure.

At 1 o'clock he will attend the grand military review which will be held on the Parade Ground in Boston

At 12½ o'clock, Col. Reed of the Governor's staff will wait upon the Prince at the Revere House.

The Prince of Wales will appear at the review to-day mounted upon the "Black Prince," owned by Col. T. Lawrence. The equipment, which has been manufactured expressly for his use by James J. Reed, 15 Tremont row, are of the richest and most gorgeous texture. The saddle is of quilted black skin, covd with blue silk velvet and bound with gold. The are also of blue silk velvet, faced with gold and edged with heavy gold fringe. The crest is the crest of the Royal Household, with the motto, "Dieu et mon droit." The holsters are of blue velvet faced with gold lace, edged with fringe and heading of gold, and cocked tipped with gold. The breastplate is of velvet bound with gold, with gold martletlike rings, and a center piece in gold, which is the gold center piece of the crest. The middle of the breastplate is of gold, with a gold martlet, and the front band of blue velvet, edged with gold fringe. Rosettes of velvet, edged with gold, and bearing the crest of the Prince, are placed on either side, and a similar rosette is on the center. The bits of gold, of the military pattern, and the horse on the mane of gold, with a crest in the center. The whole is the most splendid set of horse equipment ever made for the equipment for Maj. Gen. Bruce are the same as the Prince, except that the crest and fringe are for a collation and layse at the State House, the overton and Prince, with their suites, will take carriage and proceed to the Musical Festival at Music Hall, where they will listen to the singing of 1,200 children. This festival will occupy one hour, and as it is the Prince will return to the Revere House to prepare for the Grand Ball in the evening, which will be the festivity of the day.

[By Telegraph.]
BOSTON, Thursday, Oct. 13, 1860.

The meeting in Dublin, 1860, and the demonstrations in of the Prince are elaborate and imposing. Pub-buildings are decorated and the streets thronged. Out 3 000 men, including artillery, cavalry, and infantry, are now being reviewed on the Common by Sir John Dill, the Prince, and a numerous and brilliant staff. Ralph Farnham was introduced to the Prince this morning. The interview was quite interesting.

After the review on the Common the military force ded through several of the principal streets, trees and suits, the Governor, and others occupying the stage. This display was the most imposing ever in New-England, and was witnessed by tens of thousands. A procession followed at the State-House, by Gov. Banks, at which there was a social and largely informal interchange of good feeling. At 5 o'clock the Prince and suite were escorted to the Music Hall, where they were welcomed by twelve armed select children. The entertainers consisted principally of singing, and seemed to attract the attention of visitors much gratified. The festivities of the day wound up with a grand ball at the Academy Music.

The flag-ship Nile and steamer Styx arrived at Portland this morning.

PORTLAND, Me., Thursday, Oct. 18, 1860.
A grand ball was given last night by our citizens to Commodore and Officers of the Royal Squadron at City Hall, and was the greatest affair of the kind ever given in this city. Six hundred persons were presents, the elite of our citizens, and the English Officers re in full uniform. The hall was splendidly decor-

The N. Y. Independent says that the venerable Lyman Beecher has just passed into his 86th year.

the burden of age begins to rest upon him heavily, and not until forty or more years did he begin perceive ly to lose his normal activity of body or mind. He still like the streets, suffers no disease, but the infirmities age, and exhibits cheerful spirits, though at times a wandering mind. During the past Summer he visited any of his old friends, and even of his ten surviving children. In May, he spent a few weeks with Dr.

at Philadelphia. Returning, he passed several days at Orange, N. J., at the residence of Prof. Day. Shortly afterward he took a trip into New-Hampshire, revisiting the scenes of his early school-days at Milford, Ct., where he married his first wife in 1799. New-Haven. Pres. Day and Prof. Stillman talked over with him the events of early college life.